He has been studying the eucalyptus trees in California, which are certainly handsome trees, and with their strips of red chaging to the bark provide ripe material for impressionists. It is a curl-ous human trait, though, that the impressionist must contend against. As long as it is "a tree" the spectator is willing to secept an impression of it, but the moment one knows the artist is describing "California, then the philistine that is in all of us demands some facts in regard to the much talked of place.
